

Related posts:

- Staff changes inevitable for business
- Cutting business costs without hurting the bottom line
- Office plants boost staff morale and increase productivity
- Cutting red tape will facilitate Australian trade
- Staff Training Plan

Full Article

Cutting staff could hinder business

By Jessica Stanic on Tuesday, 21 April 2009

1
tweet

retweeted

Cutting down on staff during the recession as a cost-cutting measure could actually hinder a business' growth and profitability rather than help it, says Nic Clark, CEO of national business development franchise 10X Limited.

Recent studies conducted by the Certified Practising Accountants of Australia (CPA) have shown that half of all businesses that cut down on staff do not reduce their operating costs, two-thirds do not increase profit and over three-quarters do not increase productivity, showing that staff cutting does not ensure the ongoing success of a business.

According to Clark, staff cutting is often the first thing businesses do when they try to reduce costs, however he believes it is not the most effective cost cutting measure.

"Managers often don't realise the impact such a practice may have on staff morale and the workplace spirit. Job insecurity can be damaging to staff motivation and is likely to result in reduced productivity. Although management may have made the decision as a way to decrease costs, the opposite is often what actually occurs."

Clark suggests that, instead of downsizing and looking for ways to reduce costs, business owners should take more initiative and seek other ways to keep their businesses afloat.

"In such dire economic times, what will differentiate a business from its competitors is strong leadership. Business owners must lead with vision, connect with their employees, implement high performance management practices and have a positive attitude."

People who read this, also liked:

- Businesses reduce salary and budget expectations
- Being made redundant IS your own fault
- Employer neglect staff in downturn

Share

News

Blogs

Hot Tips

- > Australia ranks poorly for tax system
- > Unemployment forecast to hit 6.3 percent
- > Christmas hasn't started for online shoppers
- > Australia outperforms advanced world: OECD
- > Employees strike back in talent war
- > ACCI calls for small business financial inquiry
- > Business credit likely to pick up: RBA
- > Ageing population affects business
- > Pregnancy hinders career progression: survey
- > Small businesses unhappy with banks

See more news >

Sign up for our Newsletter

email address

Submit

Follow us on

Questions & Answers

How do I go about securing a business loan?

Find the answer >

How can I promote my business on a minimum budget?

Find the answer >

What do I have to consider when setting up a business?

Find the answer >

How can I communicate effectively with customers and employees?

Find the answer >

What green policies can I implement in my business to save money?

Find the answer >