In business South Australia's own independent magazine

Kingston-based accounting firm, East Partners has staged its first Cashflow in a Crisis teleseminar, with hundreds of business owners tuning in to the free 10K-hosted event.

"The response we received from the teleseminar affirmed the fact cashflow is a major problem for business owners," says East Partners director, Christopher East, who made the teleseminar available to locals through his 10K East Adelaide Business Development division.

"There is a desperate need for proven cashflow management advice at the moment - with small and large businesses suffering from cashflow problems, and even profitable businesses going broke because of cashflow mismanagement."

Christopher says 92% of business owners frequently stress about cash flow, noting a significant number have had to source additional funding, reduce operations, even take pay cuts.

"This free teleseminar was our way of supporting the East Adelaide business community, giving them the tools they need to transform the cashflow situation facing their business," Christopher says.

"The feedback we received from participants shows we have really opened their eyes to how their decisions and management strategies can drastically impact their business cashflow."

The teleseminar explored strategies such as how to implement cashflow management, how to conduct a break-even analysis and how to get the best out of a budget, aiming to give business owners greater confidence to tackle cashflow problems.
